Walking down one of its wide thoroughfares in mid-July with air temperatures in the upper 90s and relative humidity percentage in the 70s, one might wonder why anyone ever came here in the first place, or having experienced its famously oppressive summers, remained here. When combined with its relative obscurity when compared with other Southern capitals like Atlanta or Nashville only to be revealed in the national press as a place where political foolishness is likely to occur, it is small wonder that much of the outside world pays Columbia little heed. This is the state that brought us blues music legends like Pink Anderson, Josh White, and Rev. “Blind” Gary Davis as well as William Walker’s famous hymn book Southern Harmony (Greenville, Spartanburg and the Upstate), Spoleto USA and Gershwin’s Porgy and Bess (Charleston and the Low Country), Carlisle Floyd, beach music (Myrtle Beach and the Grand Strand), and the foundation for many spiritual songs (Rock Hill and York County), but what can you say about music in its capital and largest city? What do you really know about Columbia, South Carolina?

The region known as the Midlands, a stretch of land following the fall line zone of South Carolina’s central Inner Coastal Plain, received its first permanent settlements by people of European ancestry in 1740 as they moved into the interior of the state from the large...
The Southeast Chapter of the Music Library Association, Inc. (SEMLA), is a non-stock, non-profit organization dedicated to promoting the establishment, use, and growth of music libraries and collections of music materials in the Southeast. It encourages communication and cooperation with libraries and music collections not affiliated with the Music Library Association to determine how the Chapter may be of assistance to the individual library. SEMLA provides a forum for the exchange of ideas regarding all aspects of work with music materials as well as initiating and encouraging activities to improve the organization, administration, holdings, and public services of such libraries and collections. The region covered by the Chapter includes the states of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Tennessee and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

Membership Information
Membership in SEMLA is available at three levels: Personal ($10.00 U.S.), Institutional ($15.00 U.S.), and Student ($5.00 U.S.). Columbia calls! There is a good deal of useful and important information in this issue about the fall meeting (14-16 October), so be sure to read, make plans to attend, and, very importantly, vote for our new officers-to-be candidates (ballot & bios on pages 15-16).

Columbia—we met there last in 1997—has pleasant fall weather, attractive architecture and monuments, museums, a zoo, a university with a School of Library and Information Science and a music library (!), a long history, and, of course, music of all kinds. In The Flowers Collection at the Duke University Libraries, Division of Rare Books, Manuscripts, and Special Collections, one can find “Maj. General Hampton’s Quickstep,” a jaunty, march-like piano piece in C (mostly) honoring Wade Hampton III (1818-1902), cavalry officer, twice governor, and senator from the Palmetto State. (See http://library.duke.edu/digitalcollections/hasm.conf0263/pg.11.) It was written by one Lizzie C. Orchard and published by Gray & Valory in Columbia sometime in the 1860s. About Ms. Orchard, we know very little. She may have been born in South Carolina in 1844 and is thought to have studied music at the Columbia Female Institute; the quickstep is likely her only published work. About Gen. Hampton, “we” know a lot. Or, at least, serious students of Southern American history do.

In an email to MLA-L, dated July 7, Renée McBride called attention to three “Proposed Anthologies from Practicing Librarians” to be published by Routledge:

1. Library Collaborations with Writers, Artists, Musicians and other Creative Community Members
2. Library Services for Multicultural Patrons to Encourage Library Use
3. Publicity Methods to Keep Libraries in the News

There is more information in the email. I encourage individual SEMLA members to consider contributing to one or more of these anthologies. We have all heard recently about proposed or actual reduction of funding of libraries and the fragile footing of some library schools (the one at LSU, e.g.). Let’s pull together to advance the cause of libraries and librarianship. We all know how important this is—let’s spread the word. And, lest we forget, let’s also draw more interested people into SEMLA.

You will be interested to see what Program Chair Gary Boye and his committee, along with Scott Phinney and his local arrangements crew, have put together for the 40th anniversary meeting of the Southeast Chapter of the Music Library Association. In another sphere of interest, it would be the Ruby Anniversary. For our purposes, we’ll go along with the colors of the University of South Carolina: garnet and black.

Cheers!

Recent Research on Laszlo Varga (with Cheers for Walter Gerboth)
Mac Nelson, University of North Carolina, Greensboro

I was delighted when asked to write a piece on my project The Varga Legacy: An Oral History. What follows is a brief account of my research project on Laszlo Varga, which has flourished of late as a result of having won the 2010 Walter Gerboth Award.

An eminent cello soloist, chamber player, conductor, teacher, and arranger, Laszlo Varga (b. 1924) is also a great human spirit. This came home to me on the first day I spent with him back in March, 2005. Laszlo had arrived in Greensboro to join the gala three-day celebration honoring his old friend and fellow cello legend Bernard Greenhouse, who had recently donated his personal library to the Cello Music Collection at UNCG. My responsibility on this occasion (thanks in no small part to our SEMLA colleague Sarah Dorsey for whom I was working at the time) was to serve as Laszlo’s escort for the Greenhouse Celebration. After a whirlwind afternoon of greetings and music, Laszlo and I went to dinner, where he began telling me his story.

Lois Kuyper-Rushing, (Louisiana State University) was recently awarded the maximum amount of $10,000 in a 2010-11 faculty research grant from the LSU Office of Research & Economic Development for a project titled “A Thematic Index of the Works of Eugene Bozza.” Additionally, she received one of five nationwide travel awards given by ARTstor in the amount of $1500. Both awards will be used to defray costs of traveling to Valenciennes, France, during the spring semester of 2011 to study the manuscripts of composer Eugène Bozza and to interview his daughter.

Building on the success of the past two years, we will once again begin with our preconference, Music in Libraries: Just the Basics, co-sponsored by MLA’s Educational Outreach Program and MOUG. Held at Thomas Cooper Library, USC’s main library, the program will consist of a morning session with a choice between “Sound Recordings Cataloging” and “Music Reference,” and an afternoon session with a choice between “Video Recordings Cataloging” and “Music Collection Development/ Acquisitions.” This year’s line-up of instructors consists of Mac Nelson (University of North Carolina, Greensboro) and Nara Newcomer (East Carolina University), who will lead both cataloging sessions, Sara Manus (Vanderbilt University) and Nancy Zavac (University of Miami), who will teach the morning reference workshop, and Holling Smith-Borne (Vanderbilt University) and Chris Durman (University of Tennessee, Knoxville), who will lead the afternoon workshop on Collection Development. The preconference will begin on Thursday, October 14 at 9:30 AM and will conclude at 5:30 PM. Thomas Cooper Library is located three blocks from the Music Library. Complete details and registration information is available at http://semla.musiclibraryassoc.org/semla2010/preconf.html.

SEMLA’s annual conference will begin Thursday night at 5:30 PM with registration and our opening reception in the USC School of Music [www.music.sc.edu] and will feature a selection of hors d’oeuvres and beverages, graciously provided by Carolina Catering. Following the reception, attendees will have the option of seeking additional dining and diversions from among the numerous restaurants in the vicinity of the Music Library (including the Hunter-Gatherer, Miyo’s-on-Main, and Al-Amir on Main Mediterranean Restaurant) or the hotel (including Liberty Tap Room, Motor Supply, Mellow Mushroom, Blue Marlin, Damon’s, and Flying Saucer, among many others).

Friday’s morning session, held in the USC School of Music Recital Hall, will include presentations by Jacob Schaub of Vanderbilt University, Dr. Pam Dennis of Lambuth University, and Patricia Puckett Sasser of the University of South Carolina. Mr. Schaub will describe Vanderbilt’s solution to making the Blair School of Music’s student and faculty performance recordings accessible via streaming audio. Dr. Dennis will share her research on Frank Lincoln Eyer and James A.C. Dauer, two musical sons of immigrants who attended Leipzig Conservatory, taught in Jackson (TN), and ended up in South Carolina for the large part of their careers. Ms. Sasser’s presentation will explore the questions and challenges that arise from setting texts in the American literary canon as operas, with a focus on South Carolina native Carlisle Floyd and his opera Willie Stark.

Lunch will be on your own at one of the many establishments near the School of Music. In addition to the dinner choices listed above, diners may also select from Subway, Wendy’s, Which Wich?, Firehouse Subs, Moe’s Southwest Grill, Five Guys Burgers, Nice-N-Natural Sandwich Shop, Garden Bistro, Beezer’s Gourmet Sandwich Shop, Tios Mexican Café, Paul’s Philadelphia Eatery, and Monterey Mexican Restaurant.

The afternoon session will feature Dr. William Bates, Professor of Organ at the University of South Carolina, continued on page 12 city of Charleston, founded some seventy years earlier. The heart of the Midlands is located in Richland County, so-named for the fertile soil found along the banks of the Congaree River. Recognizing the need to remove its capital from the coast where it was subject to attack from the sea to a more protected and centrally located position, the South Carolina government chose an area just south of the confluence of the Broad and Saluda rivers and named it “Columbia” in 1786. Unlike other states’ capitals moved inland from the coast, South Carolina’s was the only one to go to a rural, nearly uninhabited region, thereby giving it the opportunity to plan its development. In fact, Columbia is the second oldest planned city in the United States, after Savannah. City planners designed a grid of four quadrants defined by Assembly Street (north-south) and Senate Street (east-west), each of which would be a remarkable 150 feet wide. Additional streets would be 100 feet wide and named for notable South Carolinians.

Columbia was intended as the seat of state government and that is a function that still dominates life today, but in 1801, Governor John Drayton urged the legislature to set aside land near the capitol on which to found a public university, as Georgia and North Carolina had recently done. He believed that if future South Carolina leaders made friendships in a centrally located classroom, they might one day resolve some of the acrimony between the Upstate and the Low Country. A desire on the part of the legislature to keep a close eye on its investment may have also played into the decision to build the state university in the city instead of in a remote rural setting. In any case, South Carolina College officially began classes in January 1805 with a Music was present in Columbia during these early days. Harriet Millegde Salley writes in her chapter on the arts in the Sesquicentennial Commission’s 1936 book that the first commencement ceremony at South Carolina College in 1807 had music in the program. As the settlement grew into a town, so, too, did the performing arts presence. An early newspaper, the Columbia Telescope, reported that sheet music was being sold in 1816, a choral group called “The Uranian Society” met regularly, and a former teacher in the U.S. Army named Leverett H. Coe proposed to establish a school to teach military music “in the most modern and approved manner on the most scientific principles.” By the time of the great canal-building frenzy in the late 1820s, of which the waterway parallel to the Broad River avoiding the rocks north of town is a remnant, musicians from other places were beginning to come to Columbia to perform. On April 21, 1827, there was a concert of ballads and selections from the classics demonstrating the glass harmonicon by a man hoping to sell the instrument in the Midlands. B. D. Plant owned a music store in town that sold pianofortes, Spanish guitars, flageolets, flutes, clarionets, tambourines, and violins; furthermore, newspapers advertised teachers for these instruments. In 1831, Christian Stephan organized a military band. By the 1850s, aided by the network of railroad lines that met in the capital, musicians from places as far away as New Orleans, Boston, and Berlin were giving concerts in Columbia, including Mr. Pucci, “the most celebrated performer on the harp in the United States.” In January 1854, both soprano Adelina Patti and violinist Ole Bull made appearances.

At this time, educational institutions had begun to arise.
Beginning with his student years at the Music Academy in his native Budapest, Laszlo had much to say about his career, which included an 11-year tenure as principal cellist of the New York Philharmonic under Mitropoulis and Bernstein and various professorships in Canada and the U.S. He related one extraordinary adventure after another, from hair-raising experiences while touring war-ravaged Europe with the Lener Quartet to nocturnal winter drives through the frozen Canadian wilderness with pianist Glenn Gould. Enormously energetic and quick-witted, he conversed with deep intensity and sparkling humor, even in discussion of his experience as a prisoner of the Hungarian Nazis during World War II. Listening to Laszlo describe the horrors of the labor camp, I asked him to tell me how he had managed to come to grips with it all. He answered directly, “When it was finally over, I said to myself: nothing worse can ever happen to you, Laszlo—you might as well be happy.”

As you might imagine, I did not emerge unchanged from three days in the company of such an extraordinary human being. I soon began pursuing research on Laszlo and collecting his recordings—and I especially welcomed a letter from him in which he wrote that he would be leaving his “not inconsiderable library in Greensboro with that famous depository of cello music from many distinguished sources.” Happily, this was about the time that I began working as Cello Music Cataloger at UNCG, which not only provided me direct access to the Varga Collection but also gave me the opportunity to help plan the Varga Celebration of 2007, where again I served as Laszlo’s escort.

My Varga research had proceeded only by fits and starts until I won the 2010 Walter Gerboth Award. The support I received made it possible for me to impose some order on this process by spending time with Laszlo at his home in Sarasota, FL, where I recorded our conversations and listened as he rehearsed the music of Bach and Schubert on his 1965 Castagnieri violoncello piccolo. On my last day with him, Laszlo surprised me by placing three thick folders of notes in my hands and saying “make sense of this, if you can!” I quickly realized that I was holding documents Laszlo’s son had once described to me as his father’s “notes toward a memoir.”

The Center for Popular Music at Middle Tennessee State University is pleased to announce the appointment of Dr. Dale Cockrell as the Interim Director of the Center, effective July 1, 2010. Dr. Cockrell has agreed to serve for one year while a nationwide search is being performed for a new Director.

Dr. Cockrell has a very distinguished academic, scholarly and professional record in popular music. He is Professor of Musicology at Vanderbilt University, currently on a research leave. Dr. Cockrell is the author of Demons of Disorder: Early Blackface Minstrels and Their World, Excelsior: Journals of the Hutchinson Family Singers, 1842-1846, and more than one hundred other books, articles, papers, and monographs devoted to the study of American popular music. His books have won various awards, and he has been elected to high office by his colleagues (including the presidency of the Society for American Music). Professor Cockrell has been the recipient of several grants, including three NEH Fellowships. He has held positions at the University of KwaZulu-Natal (South Africa), Indiana University, Dartmouth College, Middlebury College, the College of William and Mary, and the University of Alabama. His The Ingalls Wilder Family Songbook (a critical edition of the music referenced in the Little House books) will be published in late Summer, 2010. He is also founder and president of “The Pa’s Fiddle Project, an educational, scholarly, and musical program dedicated to recording the music of the Little House books and to reconnecting the nation’s children with the rich music legacies embedded in them.

Harry Eskew has a new hymnology web site, http://www.singwithunderstanding.com/. It has an introduction to the field of hymnology with some basic definitions and an overview of the hymn in history. Harry’s work as a hymnologist is described, and selected links to hymn-related web sites are given. There are plans to add Harry’s articles that were originally published in obscure publications not found in most libraries, making them more easily accessible. Since this web site is a work in progress, your feedback is welcomed.

of Columbia, musical prodigy Joseph Hart Denck gave concerts in his hometown following study abroad and even composed and arranged such tunes as “Mother is the Battle Over?,” Magnola Polka,” and “Keep Me Awake, Mother” for publication.

February 17, 1865 is a day that will live in infamy for Columbia. Following his march to the sea in Savannah, General Sherman and his troops then turned north for his final assault on the Confederacy in Virginia. As reports of his progress towards the Midlands reached the ears of Confederate and city leaders in Columbia, the decision was made to gather the great quantities of cotton picked from the surrounding area into the city for destruction, lest it fall into Union hands. The amount of cotton gathered was more than expected, however, and citizens were concerned that a lightweight, burning material posed a threat to their wooden homes and businesses, so large piles of the stuff were left in the streets. Here the tale diverges, depending upon whom you believe. Columbia natives of a certain age and a marker on the State House grounds will inform you that Sherman and his troops invaded Columbia and, wanting to punish it as the capital of the state that started the war, burned a large percentage of the city to the ground, including the old State House. Scholars and others less tradition-bound will say that after the Columbia mayor and other officials met Sherman at the city limit to surrender, the General lost control of his troops and, due partly to acrimony toward South Carolina in general and partly to large quantities of alcohol they consumed, set various fires around the city that got out of control when the cotton bales caught and a strong northwest wind picked up. Either way, one-third of Columbia burned down, though South Carolina College was spared.

The postwar Reconstruction years were difficult for Columbia due to political and social unrest, but the city began to rebuild and even expand. In 1870, Benedict College was founded by the American Baptist Home Mission Society on the corner of Taylor and Harden Streets, and ten years later, Allen University, another historically black college supported by the Methodist Church, relocated across the street. Chicora College was also added to the educational landscape in 1915, though it closed in 1930. Railroad lines destroyed by Union troops were replaced, and a horse-drawn railway streetcar service began in 1886, to be replaced with electric motors in 1893. Roller skating became a popular pastime in the 1880s, and the bicycle proved a major form of personal transportation in the 1890s. Occupying U.S. Army troops introduced baseball to Columbia in the 1880s, and the city began its love-affair with football on Nov. 14, 1891, when Trinity College (now Duke University) beat Furman 96-0 at the state fairgrounds. (Furman redeemed itself by pounding the University of South Carolina 44-0 the following year.) In terms of race relations, public events such as these continued on page 13

It is gratifying to conclude by reporting that Laszlo’s notes, which concern his early years in the main, have now been transformed (with the excellent assistance of budding music cataloger and future SEMLA member John Baga) into a coherent narrative of more than 25,000 words. In combination with my recent research on Varga’s life following his 1948 arrival in the U.S., this represents an important step toward preservation of the precious Varga legacy—and I like to think it upholds the Gerboth legacy, as well.

in which he will introduce us to a Pachelbel manuscript previously thought lost before being donated to the USC Music Library. Dr. Bates will perform this piece on the Lynn Dobson Pipe Organ in the Recital Hall.

Following this presentation will be a tour of the new Ernest F. Hollings Special Collections Library, attached to the main Thomas Cooper Library. The $18 million state-of-the-art facility comprises 50,000 square feet on three levels. Opened in 2010 and dedicated by Vice President Biden, the library is named for the former U.S. Senator and South Carolina Governor, who was instrumental in securing $14 million in federal funds for the building. The Hollings Library is home to three departments of the University Libraries: South Carolina Political Collections, the Irvin Department of Rare Books and Special Collections, and Digital Collections. Special features of the Hollings Library include a large reading room and work areas for researchers and other visitors, seminar rooms, a mini theater, exhibit galleries, a “treasure vault,” space for library-related events, a digitization center, and a room for audio-visual research.

The use of high-density compact shelving in the stack area allows a capacity of about 47,000 linear feet of shelving (equivalent to almost nine miles) and will accommodate about 250,000 volumes of books and approximately 20 million manuscripts, political papers, folios, maps, and framed items.

Friday evenings’ festivities will take place at the Hampton Street Vineyard (www.hamptonstreetvineyard.com), six blocks from the conference hotel. They will begin at 6:00 PM with a cash bar featuring an impressive selection of wines and spirits, followed by a banquet menu to be determined by the chef shortly before the event, once the local produce availability is known. Menu selection options will be distributed in advance of the meeting via e-mail, and will include a vegetarian choice.

Beginning at 9:00 AM, the Saturday morning session, also held in the School of Music Recital Hall, will include presentations by Sara Nodine of Florida State University and Nara Newcomer of East Carolina University. Ms. Nodine will concentrate on the various ways information resources can be modified and how these changes may be dealt with during the evaluation process. She will suggest ways information literacy instructors can incorporate a discussion of these malleable resources into their existing curriculum. After ECU’s selection and implementation of a new discovery tool, Ms. Newcomer will provide an in-depth examination of Serials Solutions’ Summon, evaluating its strengths and weaknesses for the specific needs of music patrons and will compare the tool’s music-related searching capabilities, scope, and indexing to that of other tools and traditional OPACs. She will also discuss the discovery tool selection process and how music librarians can advocate for and be mindful of our patrons’ needs. After a mid-morning break, we will conclude our conference with the annual business meeting, ending around noon.

Complete conference details, including program, hotel, and registration information, will be available at the conference web site, semla.musiclibraryassoc.org/semla2010. Early registration of $30.00 is due by September 14, 2010.

wrote often interracial, but cooperation between blacks and whites was otherwise limited during these years. The 1890s saw the rise of textile manufacturing in Columbia. By the twentieth century, the city boasted six large mills employing hundreds of workers. This industrial growth fueled the development of a series of suburbs just outside of downtown, many of which were annexed by Columbia by the 1920s. In 1917, the U.S. involvement in World War I led to the creation of Camp Jackson just east of town as a basic training facility for the U. S. Army. (In 1939, it was named Fort Jackson, and in 1960, it was made a permanent installation.) Through its proximity to this military base, Columbia saw hundreds of thousands of troops, who spent money in the city and swelled the effective population (if not the official one) to new heights. As Columbia’s population grew, so too did its skyline. The Barringer Building on the corner of Main and Washington Streets became Columbia’s first skyscraper in 1903.

Supporting this growth was a continued interest in music. Fitz Hugh Brown organized the Columbia Orchestra in the 1890s as well as a band that gave concerts all over town and the state. The Columbia Music Club was active at this time as well. In 1894, the Columbia Choral Society, meeting at Columbia College, gave a concert with pianist Franz Xaver Scharwenka. The capital city was also attracting bigger-name acts like John Philip Sousa and his band, the Dresden Philharmonic Orchestra, Victor Herbert’s Orchestra, the Cincinnati Symphony, the New York Symphony, the Russian Symphony, the Metropolitan Symphony, the National Symphony, Walter Damrosch’s orchestra, and many others. The Afternoon Music Club was organized in 1905, and its counterpart, the Evening Music Club boasted a hundred members.

In the 1930s, the Great Depression eventually took Columbia with the rest of the nation, though large-scale projects, like the construction of the Lake Murray Dam for hydroelectricity and Owens Field Airport, helped to soften the blow initially. The New Deal program WPA (Works Progress Administration) was seen everywhere in town, but the PWA (Public Works Administration) provided major construction support to the city, including McKissick Library at the University of South Carolina (now McKissick Museum).

During World War II, training at Fort Jackson kept thousands of soldiers moving through Columbia and supporting its economy. In April 1942, in what is probably its most famous contribution to the war effort, Columbia made possible the Doolittle Raid. Following the attack at Pearl Harbor and under order from President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Lt. Col. James Doolittle trained the crews of sixteen B-25B Mitchell bomber aircraft at the Columbia Army Air Force Base in Lexington County (now Columbia Metropolitan Airport) for a secret mission to launch a bombing raid on Tokyo and other major Japanese cities, ostensibly to show the Japanese people that they were not invincible and to raise American morale.

Post-WWII Columbia began to transform into what it is today. Columbia’s actual population finally surpassed 100,000 people in the 1960s after decades of generally slow but steady growth. Fueled by the GI Bill, USC’s student population exploded from 2,220 in 1945 to 26,000 in 1990, and its faculty increased by similar percentages. The Columbia Music Festival Association, founded in the 1930s as a statewide arts council, oversaw the creation of the Lyric Opera, the City Ballet, the Columbia Choral Society in its present form, the Palmetto Opera, and the Youth Opera. In 1963, the Columbia Festival Orchestra (now the South Carolina Philharmonic) began performing under the direction of USC Music Department head Dr. Arthur...
M. Fraser. Among other performing arts supported in Columbia are the Town Theater, the Workshop Theater, and Trustus Theater. USC’s Music Department formally became a School of Music in 1984 and received its current building attached to the Koger Center for the Arts in 1995. Cornelia Walker’s 1958 book History of Music in South Carolina: South Carolina Composers and Works indicates that numerous Columbia natives and residents were actively composing during the post-WWII years, although none of those listed achieved wide recognition.

Though Hootie & the Blowfish remain Columbia’s most famous native musical act, thanks to their 1994 multi-platinum album Cracked Rear View and subsequent hits, a few other Midlands artists have made it to the big time. Eartha Kitt, born in St. Matthews, southeast of Columbia, went on to have a great career as an actress and the singer of such hit songs as “Santa Baby” and “C’est si bon.” James Brown, the “Godfather of Soul”, was born near Barnwell, southwest of Columbia. Bill Pinkney, of Dalzell to the east, shaped The Drifters into the hit-making machine on Atlantic Records. Today, blues artist Drink Small, folk singer Danielle Howle, rock bands Crossfade, Hot Lava Monster, and Baumer, and the eclectic Justin & the Folk-Hop Band mark the continued vitality, if not large quantity, of Columbia’s popular music scene.

Though in its 224-year history Columbia has not risen to the heights of New York or Chicago, or even the South Carolina Upstate in terms of its musical output, one does find a steady commitment to the arts supporting the lifestyles associated with what began as and still is a government town with a large university. Between the South Carolina Philharmonic and USC’s School of Music, innumerable community music groups, and popular music bands playing in Five Points and the Vista, music is alive and well in Columbia.
